Fashion from the Trash

In 2015, Lena Vogel, a 24-year-old design student in Berlin, had a problem. She wanted to make clothes, but new fabric was expensive. One day, she noticed a big pile of old jeans outside a secondhand store. "They were going to be thrown away," she says. "I couldn't believe it."

Lena took the jeans home and cut them into pieces. Then she sewed the pieces together to make bags, jackets and even a wedding dress. Her friends loved them, so she started selling them online.

Today, Lena's company, Second Stitch, has twelve employees. Every week, about 500 pairs of jeans are collected from stores and schools in the city. The jeans are washed, sorted by color and cut by hand. Nothing is wasted: the smallest pieces are used to make keyrings.

Lena says the hardest part was not the sewing but the business side. "I had no network and no experience. Then I joined a group for young business owners, and they taught me everything."

Her advice for young people? "Find something that gives you a sense of purpose. The money comes later."

1. Lena started making clothes from old jeans because ...
 - a. new fabric cost too much.
 - b. her teacher asked her to.
 - c. a store paid her to do it.
2. Every week, the jeans are ...
 - a. bought from customers online.
 - b. sent to other countries.
 - c. collected from stores and schools.
3. The smallest pieces of jeans ...
 - a. are all thrown away.
 - b. are used to make keyrings.
 - c. are sold to other companies.
4. In paragraph 4, the word they refers to ...
 - a. Lena's employees.
 - b. the young business owners.
 - c. Lena's friends.
5. The text suggests that Lena ...
 - a. thinks money is the most important thing.
 - b. found the business side easy.
 - c. got help from other people.
